

What does Israel's defense and intelligence establishment really think about the Iran deal?

Recognizing that the P5+1 Agreement with Iran (the "Agreement") is an accomplished fact, we, the undersigned, urge the Israeli government

“ If the nuclear issue is of cardinal existential importance, what is the point of canceling an agreement that distances Iran from the bomb..?³ ”

– EFRAIM HALEVY
FORMER MOSSAD CHIEF

to adopt certain policies in light thereof, as follows: Renew the trust between and enhance the political and security cooperation with the US administration in order to prepare for the challenges emanating from the Agreement. Initiate a political move which will provide credibility to Israel's support of a two-state solution and that will enable, among its many advantages, the establishment of a moderate Sunni-Western axis which will act against the extremist forces that foster instability in the region. Such policies will enable both the integration of Israel's capabilities with those regional and international players who share the view of nuclear Iran as a serious threat, and the recruiting of moderate Arab states for the advancement of a political settlement between

Israel and the Palestinians. Signers: Asaf Agmon, BrigGen (Ret.) |

Although the agreement signed in Vienna between the world powers and Iran is not optimal, it should remove the immediate threat of an Iranian break-out leading to a nuclear military capability within a few months, as the situation without the agreement and prior to the interim agreement was evaluated. The agreement is expected to lengthen the breakout time to 12 months for at least 10 years. Council for Peace and Security Executive Board: Gadi Zohar, BrigGen (Res.) |

“ To be honest, the way the agreement looks to me, there is much more promise than threat in it, provided that cooperation on this issue is good. ... If Iran does not have any enriched uranium ore, then there is no danger that the country will have nuclear bombs.⁸ ”
